One crisis summit is following the other in Europe. The euro crisis has long become a crisis of the EU and has come into the focus of the world economic and financial crisis, which is further deepening and intensifying. Will the EU break apart because of the failure of crisis management and the intensification of the contradictions among the EU states? Or will the strongest imperialist powers in Europe succeed in subjugating the weaker EU countries more strongly? Is it possible that an EU federal state could be formed, which would not even stop at leading a war for the redivision of markets and spheres of influence? Is the idea of a policy change toward a “social, peaceful and environmentally compatible Europe” realistic or should we not rather think more about a revolutionary change of the societal order? How can it be achieved that the working-class and people’s movements in the single European countries coordinate and lead their struggles against the crisis programs of the ruling powers across company and country borders in order to build up a superior power against the solely ruling international finance capital? Are the prejudices, slanders and “thought control” of modern anticommunism against the perspective of a society without capitalist exploitation and oppression, without the destruction of the foundations of human life and imperialist wars so impossible to overcome as they seem? Or is it not actually so that behind this deterring facade is a declaration of bankruptcy of the world outlook of the imperialist exploitation system, whose time is beginning to run out? Are not the chances growing for a new worldwide start in the struggle for a socialist perspective, and how can this be helped to break through?

The seminar “The EU and the working-class and people’s movement in Europe” is being conducted together by ICOR Europe and MLPD. Its special attraction is the cooperation of numerous international participants. It has the task of developing a strategy discussion with perspective – open in world outlook, in solidarity and on an equal basis. It addresses everyone who is prepared to raise new questions and willing to contribute to their being answered and solved.
